

Plastic surgery at the 2012 Grammy Awards

2.14.12

Awards shows set the stage for scrutiny around the web: Who might have had plastic surgery? Who talks about it? Who denies it? Here's some context to help you figure it out.

Separating who was born this way from who got some help from a scalpel or a syringe is a guessing game that plays out every time there's a big, televised awards show.

Plastic surgery is just a natural part of the entertainment industry. Still, there are always surprises.

In general this year?

And Lauper once said that a 2006 tummy tuck was "the worst thing" she'd ever done.

Plastic surgeons had mixed reactions to the way she looked at the Grammys on Sunday.

But Dr. Semira Bayati, a Newport Beach plastic surgeon, said, "Cindi Lauper appears to have a fuller, smooth upper face, that doesn't match her aging, wrinkled neck. I suspect that she has had a brow lift and upper facelift. She could use a neck tightening so that the whole facial area appears more balanced and youthful as a package."

Onetime Bond girl Jane Seymour, who turns 61 this week (her birthday is Feb. 15), has publicly spoken about having gotten small breast implants and getting a 'minor' eyelift in the past.

But her face does not appear filled or surgically enhanced, in the views of a couple of plastic surgeons we asked. "More could be done to give her a more smooth and line-free skin, but she appears to want to age naturally and gracefully," said Dr. Semira Bayati of Newport Beach.
